Hell Queen laughed as the city ran.

Heroes, villains,
and citizens all
fled the beams.

Years earlier, Inferna had crossed to Earth.

She was Satan's daughter,
but not his servant.

She came to protect this world.

The world saw horns and called her monster.

Other teenagers saw the hero first.

Wild Card stood between her and the mob.

Laser Light showed the cameras what Inferna saved.

Cyber proved the disasters were not her doing.

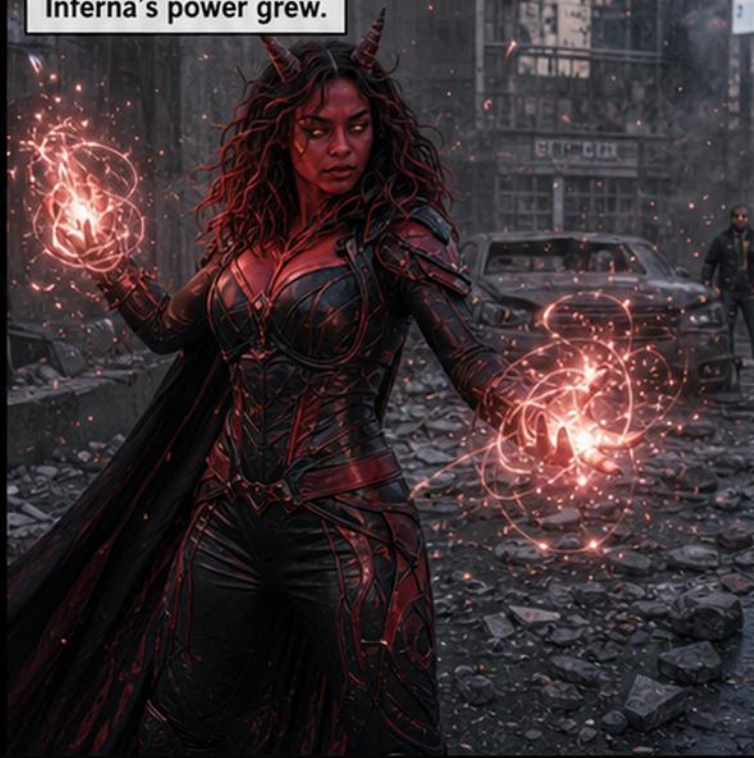

Captain Strategist gave the team a purpose.

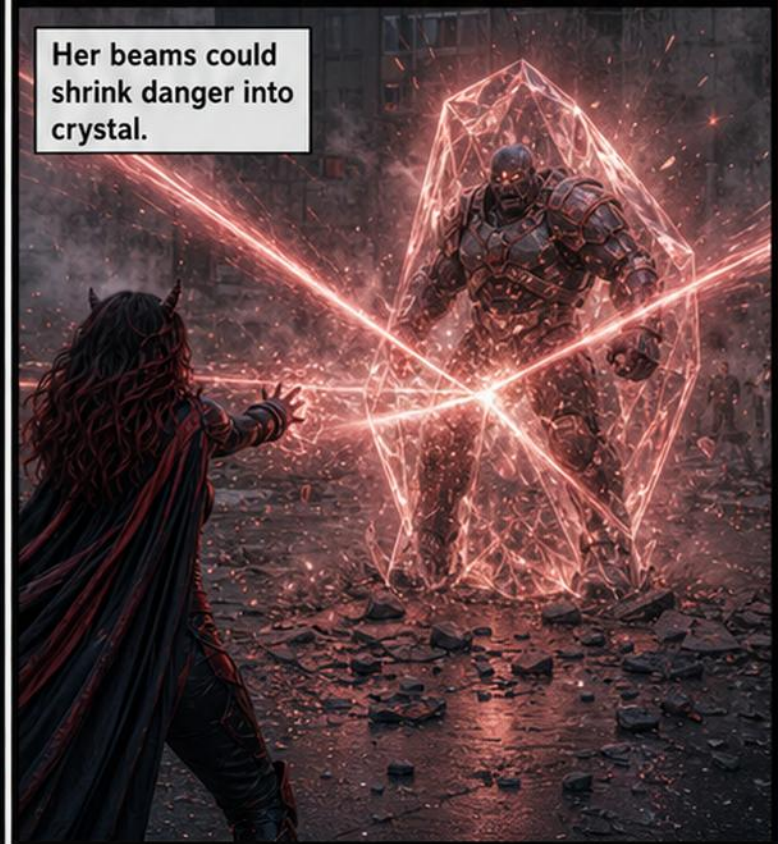

Together, they became defenders.

Years passed, and Inferna's power grew.

Her beams could shrink danger into crystal.

Villains no prison
could hold were finally confined.

The world called it justice.

She wore the crystals

Each crystal made her stronger.

The strength became intoxicating.

Then addictive.

She stopped choosing targets.

Hero, villain, civilian-- all became prizes.

Older heroes reached for lethal answers.

Her team said, No. She is ours to save.

Geomancer struck first.

Her stones could not break magical stone.

Cyber changed the frequency.

The sonic rifle cracked the crystals.

Hell Queen took him before he could finish.

Captain Strategist whispered the real plan.

Captain Strategist raised a fallen crystal.

He dared her to stop him.

Hell Queen crossed the battlefield in a blink.

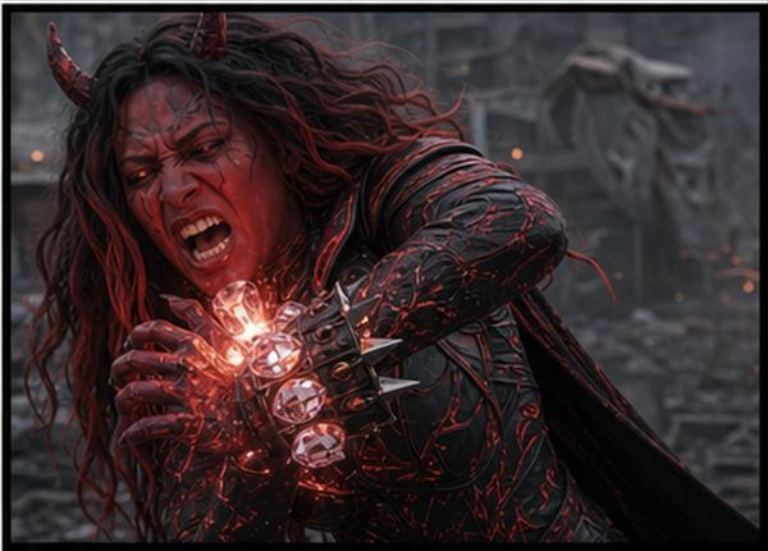

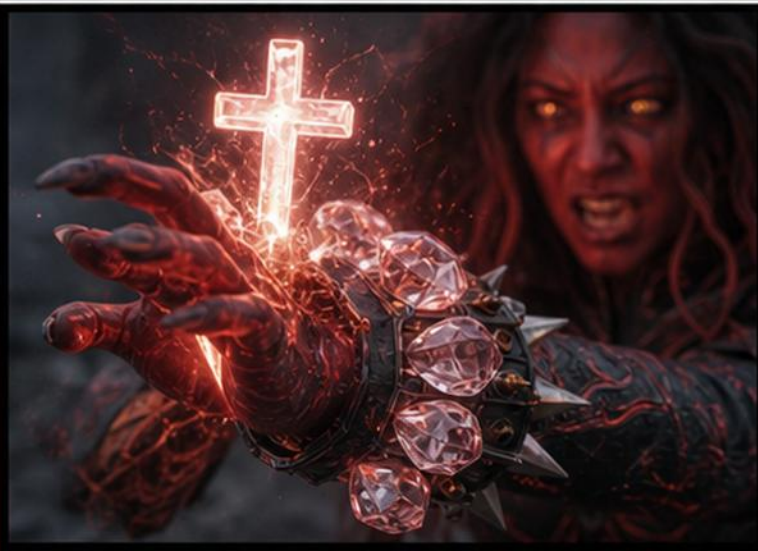

The beam took him too.

She set both prizes on her wrist.

One crystal changed shape.

The band hit the ground.

Every crystal shattered.

The captives returned.

Wild Card had been the holy symbol.

Without the crystals, Inferna was herself again.

Hell rejected her, so her friends welcomed her home.
